hi Timothy, just had general comments on the new HOA guidelines. My husband and I both appreciate the time the board has spent developing these new guidelines. However, we feel that they are way too stringent. We moved into this neighborhood because it felt more comfortable and more unique than many of the other cookie-cutter neighborhoods around here. By regulating the style, colors, materials, etc that were outlined in the guidelines, the board is also stripping g the neighborhood of it's personality. For instance, varying walkway or garage door designs are not going to be detrimental to the resale value of these homes. We don't understand how dictating these personal design elements will benefit the homeowners.

Thank you,
Matt & Meagan Brady
